2011.01~2011.12

Archibucks is an architect talents search service provider initiated by Fanfan International Education Studio.

Introduction

Dear students,

I am Allen Zhu, program coordinator of Fanfan Studio design internship program. In the report below, you can see what the students who already have been in China for the internship thought and experienced. The architecture design industry in China is still booming since the needs for houses and needs for business buildings are very high. It leads to a great demand for architects, urban planner, interior and landscape architects. So a lot design talents come to China to find their dreams. China is also a very different place from EURO or USA, you will like here very much. Chinese people are very warm hearted, they will help you if you get any difficulty on the street or in the company. But Chinese people are also very shy, they will not talk with you until you talk with them first (even they really want to talk with you). For the internship you will have in China, it will also be different from what you have in your country. Sometimes you will be very busy for one project which will need you to work until midnight, sometimes you will have little job to do staying there for a day. It is the way of working here in most architecture firms. The Chinese internship is very unique experience you will have and as you can see in the reports below that every one enjoy the experience here.

Students Report

Tommaso Zanella-Italy-Architecture

Shanghai has been in my mind since few months before graduating, as a perfect destination where to try a new good experience as an architect; then I forgot about it, because I chose a different way, heading toward different kind of experiences, until Fanfan offers came to my hands, and they brought my old desires back to life! I couldn't lose this great opportunity...and here I am, since 7 weeks already.

Even if I can say to be quite used to change my life environment for short periods, i was expecting China not to be an easy place where to live. Unexpectedly for me, Shanghai is absolutely a great city providing almost everything you need while living far from your country. Few weeks have been seriously enough to get familiar with the everyday life here in Shanghai.

What I was actually expecting is the complexity of the Chinese culture, and of all those behaviors that make Chinese people so different from people generally coming from western culture countries. Of course this is one of the main reasons why I'm here, besides the good chance that the Chinese work world can offer nowadays to young people.

After one month and a half working, I still notice huge differences between my way of thinking and my working style, and my office working process. I hope I will be able to bring some new interesting point of view to the team I'm working with, but I especially hope that I will be really satisfied about this experience, which I actually think it's gonna enrich my background, and my skills; not exclusively my architect skills, but rather my team work abilities and my capacity of understanding different ways of thinking and different references, which are basically the main obstacles that usually make the communication a bit hard.

Considering these difficulties as an important part of this experience, I find myself quite satisfied so far, even if the office I'm working with is mainly dealing with landscape design, which is not really my subject. I can say this, because I recognize the work itself just as a part of the wider experience I'm living here in China, which is obviously a really complete experience if you live it at 360 degrees.

Paola Sammarco-Italy-Architecture

My name is Paola and I come from Italy. I am a young Building Engineer recently graduated from "Politecnico di Milano".

I have always dreamed of having a unique and unrepeatabe life experience in a Country rich in tradition and with an inimitable and fascinating culture.

This dream is becoming true, day after day here in Shanghai, thanks to being in touch with fantastic Chinese people in this beautiful Country which can increasingly charm my way of thinking and my personality.

Even if I have been in Shanghai for just two weeks, I can feel to be part of those special people who are around me; my Chinese friends are becoming my point of reference for my daily opportunity of cultural growth! And I really would like to learn Mandarin in order to be able to communicate with everybody here in China! It could be very nice that's why I will do my best to learn quickly!

The training experience in the company is enriching me from the educational point of view, with regard to my major, and not only; this experience in the Institute is also an exclusive opportunity for an interesting cultural exchange! This is the motivation why I have decided to come to China! I want to give new values to my cultural and formative "baggage"!

In the office it is very interesting to combine my own ideas with Chinese young talents' creativity and together we can create new architectural projects with so many strengths!

To have experience with young Chinese is favorable because there is always a close collaboration in the creative team!

Once back in Italy, I will have a lot to say to my family and friends and I hope to stay in touch with Chinese friends also in the future!

Nicola Ghirardi-Italian-Architecture

"My internship in Shanghai came to me so randomly!! I was not really supposed to come here, but a friend told me about Fanfan, and as I applied they answered me with many offers, and real soon a Chinese company contracted me for 6 months! i was so excited that I couldn't wait, and I came to Shanghai after 2 weeks!

In the company there were just local people, and not all of them could speak English properly, but everyone has been so kind and helpful with me since the beginning!

Of course moving to China is not so easy, between bureaucracy, rent, transportation, and then way of life and different habits! But anyway i never really felt alone or left out, getting to know many people around really fast, as Shanghai is also pretty full of foreigners!

Fanfan also organized some nice activities, such as meetings, events, trips, dinner and so on... it was really cool because I had the chance to know many people doing my same experience here, and to get new friends!

Professionally, I also found many differences, comparing the company to the previous office I've been working for. At the beginning my work was easier and more operative, but after few months they started to give me more responsibility in the project design and inside the creative process. I have a really good feeling with all my bosses; they've always been kind and respectful to me.

Now, after 5 months, they are offering me a contract for another year, and basically I see good perspective, so I think I'm going to accept it!

I'm really happy about my experience, and I can really say that it changed my life (a lot!)

Of course, I also have other friends that had not such good experiences like mine, but, after being lucky, I also think that it is really important to keep a positive attitude in these situations, because there's always so much to learn and many (maaanyyyyy) surprises around the corner! Especially in SH!!! :)"

Ruben Ruiz-Spain-Architecture

I've been living and working as an architect in Shanghai for three months already and I have to say that the experience so far has been awesome.

The possibility of coming to live to a place like China seemed to me like entering a different world, a place where you would have to change all your habits. In a way that was right, I've lived in some countries in Europe and China is not just like any other place.

Living in China has become a more than interesting experience in these first three months, and I have to say that Shanghai is the perfect city to enter such a different country because it offers a perfect balance between Chinese life and expat life. It is the most international city in China so it is prepared to help foreigners who don't speak Chinese, you will find many more Chinese people speaking in English in Shanghai than in any other city in China (you can also see many signs on the street written in English and even in the Metro you can here information in English).

At work I had to get used to a new way of working and face some difficulties with the language. Communication was the big issue at the beginning but we worked that out, people in the office tried hard with English and were patient with my difficulties. Now I just ended my three months probation period and they seem to be happy with my performance, so I will stay as a regular employee.

I came to Shanghai alone but it was easy to find people to share the experience with. I've made many good friends in these first months and I am enjoying every single minute in China. How long will I stay? Who knows? I don't have a dead line, I am enjoying this too much to think on when it will be over.

Fraser Maitland-UK-Architecture

Having now completed five weeks of my architectural training and cultural experience in Shanghai, I can testify to both the value and importance of architectural learning in an international environment.

So far, I have been involved in projects at various stages of development, aiding with site analysis, design, and the production of 3D graphics for presentation. I have found a great value in aiding and observing the development of projects through various stages of development, from concept to construction, an important contrast to the theoretical design of projects at university. Furthermore, the experience I have gained in handling advanced modeling software will support the project work I will undertake upon my return to the United Kingdom in September.

The office too provides an excellent working environment. Despite the problematic English-Chinese language barrier, my colleagues have been welcoming and have integrated my developing skills into the various ongoing projects. As I live in Shanghai, I hope to be able to develop my Mandarin, using it to further my learning in the office.

I have expanded my architectural scope through the observation of experienced architects and through producing visual work important to the presentation and understanding of a project. Following a site visit to Changzhou, I produced a 3D model of the existing landscape and buildings, which will be used a tool to illustrate to a client the manner in which the site will develop over the period of construction. During the early stages of this developing project, as the practice establishes design proposals, I have also produced analysis documents, breaking down the function and circulation of the existing hospital, informing the brief for the replacement building. As the project develops, I expect to become involved in design and presentation work, learning and developing skills that I can carry forward into the post-graduate part of my university degree.

Ruxandra Corfita-Romania-Architecture

My internship started 2 months ago at the beginning of October. In my first week here you had your national holiday so I didn't go to work. It was better for me because I had time to analyze a bit this beautiful city.

I will start this report with my opinion about living in Shanghai. I must say that I simply love China. I love it since I was four years old and I always wanted to visit it and to live here, at least for a short period of time. I was in China before in May but I only visited Yiwu and Beijing. For the first moment I felt like being home. So for me China is similar with my home.

About Shanghai, to be honest I expected this city to be full of cars and tall buildings (actually it is but...). But it also has the human scale. I mean that you don't feel so small like in Manhattan. I like the contrasts. Shanghai is full of them. It is interesting. In one hundred meters you could find at least four worlds in the same time. I love the parks. I love the way people play sports here.

Yes, it's true in the first weeks it was a bit hard with the food, with the language sometimes... For example at a moment I had an awful pain in my arm for one week and I tried to go alone to the pharmacy to find the right medicine. I couldn't. And the pain was increasing. In the end I asked my Chinese colleague to help me. We found some magical plasters and that was. After that the things became easy.

About my office, well this subject it's tricky. Working here is totally different than in my country. We, people who work in architecture, know that you have to change and to improve your work all the time. Sometimes is frustrating. You can not see the end of the project. You're tired and everything seems to be wrong. And one moment after, almost instantly, we see the light. Ok, maybe I'm too romantic. I'll stop. I'm trying to be objective but it is hard, as I'm writing about my personal experience.

The company where I'm working is a French one, which has the main office in Beijing. I like their projects. I think people working in VP China are very good professional. And I like my colleagues. They are very patient and our boss is the most patient man I have ever met. Another different point... Before starting working I used to make a list with all my objectives, considering that if you are not organized you can not do a good job. In this office I don't have this list. And for the moment it is at least strange. I don't think this is good. I'm a bit confused at the moment, because I enjoy designing in this office, but I really hate the undefined schedule. For example back home you could know for sure that the deadline is in three days time and what exactly do you have to do. I also think that because we don't have the same mother language the communication is a bit complicated.

Finally, I want to say that I'm happy to be in Shanghai. I learn all the time new things and I met a lot of nice people. And most of the time is easier to be here than home. Strange I'd say...

Vlad Osiac-Romania-Architecture

"In July 2011 I graduated from Ion Mincu Architecture and Urban Planning University from Bucharest Romania, with a master degree in interior design. Of course, giving the economic situation in Europe at the moment, I found myself struggling between small uninteresting projects. So joking with my father one night, he stated that if I want to work on some real projects, I should go to China.

So I did.

After some minor research on the internet, I stumbled across Fanfan. I sent them the CV and Portfolio, and in a couple of weeks I had already 2 internship offers. So I choose DONGZHU Architects.

From the beginning I knew I did a good choice. The amount of involvement I got in their projects, right from the start was incredible for me, mostly because I never got the chance to work on such a big scale projects, having assignments from designing art deck high rise buildings, to private VIP villas, a conference center, some retail buildings, and even some sculptural art. And everybody knows that time goes quicker when u is enjoying your work.

So now, in my third month of China, I got offered a permanent architect position, and I accepted it, extending my stay here from the 3 planed months to a n months stay, where "n" is unknown."

Mihai Medvedovici-Romania-Architecture

I arrived in Shanghai for my three month cultural exchange on the 1st of October, not knowing what to expect, other than going to a distant country very different from my own, but soon I found out that life in Shanghai isn't all that different from what I knew back home. Because there are quite a few young European people doing similar programs here, I am part of a big group, so I never feel lonely, and besides I met a lot of very friendly Chinese people who I already call my friends.

The experience at the architecture company I am doing my training in has been very interesting, although a little tiring, because architecture is a very dynamic and demanding field. In spite of this, I don't regret coming to China for my training, because it's a unique opportunity to see how a big international company designs buildings at a larger scale than in Europe at the moment.

Pedro Melo-Spain-Architecture

Talking about China in my country was talking about unimaginable things; thought was a distant country, sincerely strange and impossible to live in. All that changed once you land in Shanghai.

Skyscrapers, people and taxis is the perfect definition for this great city!

I've noticed that is full of good and noble people, ready to help with whatever is needed and when they do not understand you, they try it really hard.

Thus began my experience in China.

It is true there are things I miss from my country, but here I found refuge in others.

At first it seems odd, no one understands you and sunlight never seems to come through. But it is not, better days are coming, Shanghai is unpredictable. Life compared to other countries is very accequible, transportation, food, housing everything is twice cheaper and to my surprise quality is much better.

I live in one of the most charming neighborhood Jingan District, in an apartment number 30 and the views are incredible. Still can believe I can say that I am actually living in China!

As for work I can not ask for more, the atmosphere is very quiet, my co-workers and employees are very friendly and although we sometimes do not understand each other, there is always ... Google translator.

A friend gave me the clever idea of learning two words per day and that I'm doing, with the help of my co-workers and my effort, I think that soon I'll have a more extensive vocabulary and can communicate more easily.

What has surprised me is the dedication and delivery of Chinese for work. It's amazing to see that if a project is not completed, they won't go, even though they can finish the next day. This has really taught me not to leave for tomorrow what you can do today.

One big difference I've noticed at the office, compared with Spain or the Dominican Republic, is that designing concepts are always lean toward Art Deco movement, which I like very much because I was not familiar with this line and I'm learning new things every day. Besides that, creativity is not as important as punctuality in handing out a project to a client. This last point is really tough for me to learn, because I was taught that first come the creativity.

It is true that culture shock is large when compared with Western countries, but if you're willing to live the adventure, let yourself go and open up new possibilities, you're in the perfect city... Shanghai is inexhaustible!

Andreea Batros-Romania-Architecture

My name is Andreea Maria Batros, I come from Romania. I'm been living in Shanghai for almost 3 months and I have to say I find life here really amazing!

I enjoy working in my company. I met really nice people here, starting with Chinese staff that has been very helpful in my first days here, and also the foreigners' team! I get to work on interesting projects and this is a chance that in Romania I would never have had mainly because architecture and construction field is pretty low right now. I like that they have an organized program and we always respect it, expect maybe for 2 or 3 times when we had to spend overtime because we had a deadline.

I came here for 6 months training program, but to be honest I would like to stay longer.

The city is amazing! I discover interesting things every day, I meet new people at every step and everyone is so kind and they smile every time. I didn't have time to visit other cities until now but I plan on doing that before I go back to my country.

I want to thank FanFan for all the help and support they offered, Allen who helped me with all the documents before I came here (sorry if I was a little pushy at one point) and Tina who is amazing!!

So in the end, it's an experience worth living and I am glad I had the chance to come here!

Aura Istrate-Romania-Architecture

Experiencing a new environment and new urban regulations is an important fact for a planner, as he has to deal with the expectations and requirements citizens, investors and administration have from an urban space.

The situation in China is not much more different from what is happening in other countries. Besides the regulation, which, in my opinion is less strict, the main objectives followed are the same – those of having a better city from economic, environmental and social point of view for our societies. It is interesting, though, to apply in design projects the values and requests different cultures have from a living space.

In this particular office, where I live my own experience, I appreciate most the fact that everyone's ideas are listened and that each of us is doing what he knows best to do, in other words trying to practice his profession as good as possible.

Alexandra Tobescu-Romania-Architecture

My life in Shanghai has changed so much! Everything is so different but pleasant, and for me the best work to describe it would be: fascinating. Starting from simply walking on the street and having people smiling at you or offering different treats from actually enjoying experiences with new friends or Chinese people, everything seems like a dream and after 2 months here I still cannot believe I am on the other side of the world.

Working here as a graduated architect is also very different. Different working styles - not necessarily programs - but a different approach in thinking and handling situations, but I am happy to learn and acquire any new techniques. Chinese people seem to work very hard, no matter the hour, and they are very devoted to their job. Even if they would not be very keen to adopt western styles or building they do know them, and try to get as much information about western architecture as possible, which can be nothing but a good feature. I would be gladly to stay longer than originally planned; I can never get tired of Shanghai.

Alba Beroiz-Spain-Architecture

I have been working here in Shanghai for 1 month and a half now. It is a Chinese company, and all my colleagues are Chinese, so that means I am the only one from occident. But they are all being very kind to me, and they try the best to make me feel comfortable.

Sometimes communication is a little bit difficult, because the English level of lots of them is not very high, or just because they are so embarrassed to talk in English that they call other people to translate for them, although the level is good enough. But in the end we have always understood each other.

The wonderful thing of being doing an architecture internship in china is that here the construction process goes really fast, so you can see one design that you have been working on being built really fast. Another good point is that they really appreciate foreign architects, because we can bring the studio new ideas and styles. They will listen to and considerate all your ideas, and for sure they will like all of them (that means lots of possibilities to build them).

And we can also learn from them the quick rhythm they have to do things, they are very efficient.

The bad thing is that the quality of the architecture in china is not as good as it is in Europe... but of course, that's only my opinion.

About the life in Shanghai, it's great to live here! Everyday a new surprise is waiting for you. Walking among skyscrapers while you are watching people selling all kind of prepared food in every corner of the street is a unique experience. Contrasting, traditional and modernity.

And there are so many things to do in such a big city. You can find almost anything you want. Even beautiful traditional little villages are very close to Shanghai.

In conclusion, although there are things that could make my life a little bit better in China (like speaking Chinese), I am very happy to have decided to come here, and right now I would not want to be anywhere else!
